MANAGER'S COMMENTS

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE MARKET

Wow! This was the best month for the Russell 2000 since September 2017. As a result, small cap leads large and small to mid-caps on both a year-to-date and a one-year basis. Across the board smaller outperformed the categories above it. Microcap beat small and all of the larger categories.

The Target Fund Manager suspects that this is a reflection of the market believing that we are not in a late cycle economy. Microcaps and small caps typically lead early in the cycle rather than late. The inflows into small and microcap exchange-traded funds has served to accentuate this trend. The Target Fund Manager has also observed that in addition to small cap, lower quality, lower leverage, low-to-zero yield and higher beta have outperformed. This is the picture of a messy market that is very difficult for their approach.

A selection of political winds were blowing in Washington during the month – tariffs, trade wars, NAFTA negotiations, a variety of investigations around potential meddling in the presidential election plus the pas de deux between Mr. Trump and Mr. Kim Jong Un. Mr Trump is a disruptor and seems to enjoy chaos. From that perspective, May was a banner month.

The 10-year Treasury note yield reached 3.1% in mid-May and then promptly reversed course. It finished the month at 2.83%. This is a key indicator for many who are closely monitoring inflation expectations.

The earnings season has been quite strong with strong performances across the capitalisation spectrum. For the balance of the year small cap expectations are higher than mid and large, according to Jefferies Research Services. They report that for the full year, earning expectations are now 27.9% for small cap versus 19.6% for large caps. Both are strong numbers but this is a very strong spread favouring small.

In terms of sectors, healthcare was the best performer with the strongest contribution to returns coming from biotech. There was also strength in energy, technology and real estate investment trusts (REITs). Lodging and office & industrial REITs were the main contributors. The utility sector was the main laggard.

LOOKING AHEAD

The impact of the tax reform bill and the fiscal stimulus from the new budget has driven earnings expectations higher. According to FactSet, expectations are for a 27% year-over-year earnings increase in the small cap space. This is a significantly large number.

As a result, valuations have come down a lot. For example, the forward price-earnings ratio (P/E) for the Russell 2000 index is now 19.5x, which is almost a reasonable number but the Target Fund Manager hastens to point out that the long-term average P/E for small caps is 15.8x forecast earnings-per-share (EPS).

As noted at the beginning of this document, economic numbers are good. In some cases the numbers are as good as the market has seen in years. Both business and consumer confidence are strong, and confidence begets confidence.

Wait and see on tariffs

An interesting point is that after a decade of monetary policy driving growth, fiscal policy is now in the driver's seat. Key headlines from Washington this quarter, at least as far as the market is concerned, centre on trade issues.

The proposed tariffs on foreign steel and aluminium, plus the additional tariffs proposed on an undetermined set of Chinese products, have spooked investors. The Chinese have quickly responded in kind, albeit in a measured fashion. The Target Fund Manager reminds their investors to look at what the administration does and to not get caught up in various headlines and tweets.

As an example, note the initially proposed blanket tariffs on steel and aluminium, and the subsequent "exceptions" granted to a large number of countries. Poor Norway has been left in the proverbial cold (not receiving an exception) but fortunately for them their steel exports to the US are quite modest.

The Target Fund Manager cautions investors to wait and see the effects of any tariffs. For example, on the steel and aluminium issue the cost of goods has been raised for middlemen who use raw steel and create products to be sold to end-manufacturers. As another example, Boeing's share price took a hit in mid-March because of the anticipated impact of higher steel and aluminium costs. The stock has not yet recovered. This recalls to mind Hamlet's comment to Horatio that "There are more things in heaven and earth, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

To the extent that tariffs and trade wars materialise, this will be to the disadvantage of US large cap stocks as a larger percentage of their revenues come from non-US sources (36%) than small cap companies (18%).

A rise in the dollar expected

Finally, the Target Fund Manager is keeping a close eye on the US dollar. The Target Fund Manager anticipates that the Federal Reserve will continue on its path of steady rate rises. All things being equal the dollar should rise in value as rates rise. If it doesn't, that could signal problems on the horizon. The US has a significant need to sell US Treasuries.
