MANAGER'S COMMENTS

MARKET REVIEW

The major spotlight for global markets in November was mainly related to the highly anticipated trade talks between US and China. Both leaders showed signs of optimism in reaching a deal during the upcoming dinner meeting in G20 on 1st December, which sent markets up during the month (MSCI China +3.9%, HSI Index + 4.3%). Oil prices, on the other hand, tumbled, with US crude plunging 22% in November due to record output by leading producing nations and swelling US crude stockpiles. On the macro front, China continued to disappoint, with China's Official PMI down by 0.2 to 50.0 in November; slightly below market consensus.

Policy wise, the Chinese Vice Finance Minister stated plans for more tax cuts to help spur domestic consumption, meanwhile China is also increasing fiscal spending including a RMB214 billion stimulus plan was designed to support economic activity at poorer rural areas. Numerous managed funds established at local provincial levels aimed to aid healthy listed companies with liquidity issues arising from previous stock collateral loans have also started operations, which shall provide some support for overall market sentiment.

Sector wise, we saw a rebound on sectors that were previously oversold, including China developers, auto dealers and manufacturers, mobile hardware and city gas operators. On the other hand, upstream oil and gas operators and downstream oil service names suffered from declining oil prices; cyclical sectors such as cement, steel, coal and retail names also fell in anticipation of slower economic growth.

MARKET OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

We continue to keep our slightly positive view as we did last month. Markets seemed to stabilize after a volatile period and so we do not expect a further deterioration in near term. More importantly, there are more signs of relief in the trade tension between US and China, although it has not been totally solved. Furthermore, the Chinese government launched more supportive policies to cushion the economy and the stock market. Valuation-wise, although the market is trading close to historical trough, we expect supports will only come in for certain sectors with solid fundamentals. We cannot stress more that sector and stock selections will be the key to performance going forwards.

For sectors, we have not changed our core views. In the longer run, we remain constructive on consumption, healthcare and technology sectors. We believe their secular growth story is still very much intact, with cheaper valuations in sight. We will take this chance to accumulate gradually. In company level, we skewed our portfolio towards companies with strong balance sheet, good cash flow and better policy outlook. This has proved to allow us to better weather through market volatility and achieve more consistent return. Finally, we will keep our overall position flexible so that we can catch any potential market opportunities.

For Taiwan markets, we continue to expect underperformance within the Apple supply chain. This was proven to be correct after Apple revised down its shipment outlook lately. We will stick to leaders as they are able to gain market share during industry downturn. On the non-tech side, we still like banks as they are a clear beneficiary of the US rate hike cycle.
