MANAGER'S COMMENTS
MARKET OVERVIEW

Asian equities recorded a strong return in December, aided by the US-China trade progress following a “phase one” trade deal. The improved trade outlook boosted sentiment towards growth and export oriented sectors such as technology and consumer discretionary, while profit-taking pressure continued to see defensive sectors underperforming. In fixed income, government bond yields rose overall, reflecting the better risk sentiment. The US 10-year Treasury yield rose 14 bps.

MARKET STRATEGY AND OUTLOOK
Equity

Over the month, the Target Fund Manager continued to diversify their financial / banking exposures away from Hong Kong to the rest of the region, via a new position in a Korea bank and an existing holdings in Singapore. Valuation of the Korea banking sector is attractive given the expectation of higher pressure on net interest margin amid falling yields, which have stabilised recently and should provide some re-valuation opportunity. For Singapore, despite slower economic growth locally, the Target Fund Manager continues to expect steady earnings supporting a robust level of dividends. The Target Fund Manager also continued adding to a Singapore telecom name. While the development of 5G infrastructure could result in short-term pressure on capex, the network sharing scheme as required by the regulator is likely to help the strong incumbent to regain some pricing power, which could boost earnings in the mid-term after the last few years of margin erosion due to increased competition. On the other hand, the Target Fund Manager closed their position in a China hydropower generator to take profit given its strong performance in 2019. The Target Fund Manager also trimmed their holdings in a Thai utility provider as the Target Fund Manager believes its potential growth has already been priced in.

The improved backdrop has seen an upward re-rating of the cyclical / growth oriented sectors, in particular for exporters which have been hampered by trade tensions, while defensive and high dividend names have been under profit-taking pressure. The Target Fund Manager believes the strong momentum of the growth sectors is likely to continue given the optimism around the trade-deal between US & China, as well as the bottoming out of the technology cycle. However, the Target Fund Manager must also not forget that the valuation of growth stocks, while cheap in Q4 last year, is no longer as attractive any more after the rally. Therefore, the upside potential is now less than before. On the other hand, although generally the investment environment is brighter for 2020, the market is still faced with a number of risk factors, including the situation in the Middle-east and Democratic primary elections (starting in Feb), which could trigger volatility and defensive dividend stocks would be in favour again. Therefore, balancing the upside potential and the risks, the Target Fund Manager has decided to incrementally add to some dividend growers in the cyclical sectors (such as tech, energy and materials) in order to allow to portfolio to increase participation in the upside. At the same time, the Target Fund Manager would still like to preserve the overall defensive nature of their Target Fund to ensure style consistency and will continue to actively manage downside risks through equity hedges if needed.

Fixed Income

Overall, the Target Fund Manager continued to trim their high yield exposures to reduce risk and portfolio vulnerability. The Target Fund Manager then took part in a new issue of a perpetual note by a mega-cap China property developer. The Target Fund Manager believes contracted sales of the sector continue to post robust growth, while lower overall funding rate has also alleviated refinancing concerns, despite the ongoing potential of tightening of policy on the sector. The Target Fund Manager also added to a Macau gaming name, as gaming revenue in Macau has continued its downtrend in December but is expected to stabilise. The other issue that the Target Fund Manager added to is a perpetual green bond issued by a Philippine energy company, which is well-bid by investors amid the growing demand for green bonds in the region. Elsewhere, the Target Fund Manager took profit on their position in a Japan railway company and exited Sri Lanka government bond, which have outperformed recently. The overall portfolio duration is at 1.5 years.

With economic growth moderating, most Asian central banks have eased more than expected in 2019, creating a lower rate environment that is generally supportive for Asian credit. However, looking ahead, the Target Fund Manager believes 2020 will be a more challenging year for credit investors as the tailwind of monetary easing is likely to wane. At the same time, in some areas such as China, default risks are likely to rise while growth momentum is expected to remain weak. That said, the Target Fund Manager believes fiscal and monetary response by the authorities should remain supportive, thus the Target Fund Manager certainly do not see growth collapsing as infrastructure investment should pick up against a backdrop of a still resilient services sector. As such, the Target Fund Manager remains concerned about highly leveraged companies in the region and hence the Target Fund Manager is happy to reduce their market exposure to high yield companies with weaker financials. The Target Fund Manager maintains a relatively cautious stance in managing the portfolio to ensure quality and income stability.
