RHB AMERICAN INCOME FUND - USD CLASS B

The Fund aims to provide a high level of current income by investing in one (1) target fund.

MANAGER'S COMMENTS
GLOBAL MARKET REVIEW

Fixed-income markets were mixed in September, as the pace of the global economic recovery began to slow; pandemic cases accelerated in the UK, eurozone and parts of the US; hope for a new fiscal stimulus package in the US faded; and trade tensions remained elevated. The upcoming US presidential election became more contentious, leading markets to trend lower. Short-term rates remained anchored, while yield curves flattened, as longer-term interest rates fell in most developed markets (DM) and market participants adopted a modest risk-off stance.

More than 50 central banks held meetings in September across DM and EM with no major surprises. Central bankers generally reinforced the need to maintain short-term rates at historic lows for the foreseeable future, while remaining flexible to assist in the global economic recovery. The US Federal Reserve (the Fed) provided no real additional direction on policy, and the growth of the Fed balance sheet has stalled. Chair Jerome Powell and other members of the Federal Open Market Committee reiterated the need for additional US fiscal stimulus. The European Central Bank announced that it is researching the benefits of average inflation targeting in its first structural review since 2003, and its corporate bond-buying program continues to grow at a substantially higher rate than the Fed's. The Bank of England mentioned that it would begin "structured engagement" with regulators on how negative interest rates might be implemented.

Nongovernment sector returns varied, with higher-quality assets outperforming on a relative basis. Globally, investment-grade corporate bonds had slightly negative results. High-yield corporate bonds declined the most, taking a pause after strong recent returns. The Bloomberg Barclays US Corporate High Yield Index returned -1.03%, with other industrial up the most, returning 0.68%, while energy returned -4.22%.

Within securitized assets, credit risk-transfer securities (CRTs) held up well in September thanks to strong fundamentals and technicals. Commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) cash bonds also gained as investors searched for yield and the overall delinquency data saw continued marginal improvements. At the same time, CMBX.6 declined in line with risk assets. Oil prices fell sharply as inventories rose and the demand picture softened, with Brent crude oil retreating by 5.6%. Gold fell by 4.2% as near-term inflation worries subsided, while copper prices were down modestly by 0.3%.

EM held in well the first two weeks of the month but underperformed the latter half of the month as macroeconomic volatility picked up and the US dollar strengthened against most EM currencies, with the notable exception of the South Korean won, Taiwan dollar and Chinese renminbi. EM hard-currency sovereigns returned -1.85% per the EMBI Global Diversified Index, while EM corporates returned -0.48% per the CEMBI Broad Diversified Index. The US dollar also advanced relative to major DM currencies except the yen, which is also considered a safe haven currency during periods of market uncertainty.
