MANAGER'S COMMENTS

Malaysia Government Securities ("MGS") performance in January gave us a taste of how investors perceive the local interest rate market in 2014. Buying interests were mostly skewed towards the short end of the curve, and the month ended with a bearish steepening trend. At close, the 3-, 5-, 7-, 10-, 15-, 20- and 30-year MGS were priced at 3.26% (December 2013: 3.33%), 3.75% (3.69%), 4.08% (3.98%), 4.24% (4.08%), 4.54% (4.50%), 4.58% (4.55%) and 4.90% (4.92%) respectively. Similarly, the Government Investment Issues ("GII") yields also traded higher with 3-, 5-, 7-, 10-, 15-year and 20-year benchmark yields crossed at 3.37% (December 2013: 3.38%), 3.96% (3.95%), 4.13% (4.06%), 4.26% (4.41%), 4.70% (4.66%) and 4.80% (4.79%).

The first 2 auctions of the year - new issuance of 10.5-year MGS (MGS 07/24, RM4.0 bln, average yield 4.181%) and reopening of 5-year GII (GII 04/19, RM3.5 bln, 3.953%) - received moderate bid-to-cover ratio of 1.814x and 1.957x respectively.

On the domestic economic front, December 2013 inflation rises to 3.2% YoY (November: 2.9%), above consensus of 3.1% YoY, bringing inflation for the full year to 2.1% (2012: 1.6%). As we have guided, the slew of recent and planned administered price adjustments maybe fanning inflation expectations. The December data suggests that the breadth of inflation is widening. Despite the upside surprise in inflation as well as hints of rising inflation expectations and second round effects, market reaction post announcement was muted and believe that Bank Negara is unlikely to take action immediately. True enough; the Overnight Policy Rate ("OPR") was unchanged at 3.00% in January 2014 despite with slightly more hawkish tone. In the statement, the Monetary Policy Committee ("MPC") assessment of the global economy appears to have improved with support from emerging economies and recovery in the advanced economies. Sustained performance was also observed in the domestic economy in 4Q2013 with better export and firm domestic demand. However, the MPC downplayed the upward inflation trajectory by attributing it to domestic cost factors, which the MPC believe it to be contained by "subdued external price pressures and moderate domestic demand conditions".
