MANAGER'S COMMENTS

MARKET REVIEW AND OUTLOOK

Stock markets rallied in November 2014, catching up and balancing out their September and October downturn.

European Central Bank (ECB) President Mario Draghi gave a strong signal that additional policy easing is well possible. During Mr. Draghi's comments to the European Union (EU) parliament on 17 November, he went a step further in signaling the possibility of additional ECB balance sheet expansion, which could entail a variety of assets, including sovereign bonds, to achieve price stability over the medium term.

Echoing his famous "whatever it takes" speech from 2012, he said that "we will continue to meet our responsibility—we will do what we must to raise inflation and inflation expectations as fast as possible, as our price stability mandate requires of us."

The ECB can be expected to soon announce a broadening of its asset purchase programme, possibly as soon as January 2015.

Oil prices have fallen by broadly 30% since early July. The combination of abundant oil production and weaker global demand has lowered oil prices substantially this year.

Five to seven years of high oil prices have evoked supply growth in the oil industry, with US shale oil the most prominent source of supply growth. However, budgets for further exploration are being freeze or cut in reaction of lower prices, hence the market should return to a more balanced situation around the middle of next year.

The slump in the oil price has wreaked havoc on some emerging economies and has taken a toll on the share prices of energy firms. Nonetheless, cheaper oil is still a net positive for global gross domestic product (GDP) because of the much larger boost it will give to oil consumers.
